

The civilian

I am just there, everywhere,
I do everything right, day after day.

But you don't care,
All you do is blow my home away

Scarred for life,
Injured forever.

I want to end this strife,
It's not my fault, never.

You're there, constantly ready to oppress,
You drive me away with your selfish heart.

I run, then I'm homeless,
But all you do is laugh when you see me depart.

You don't care if you kill me, my family or friends,
You are driven by soulless, heartless men.
And you will kill many of me, so many that the damage never ends,
This must change, only I don't know when.

Now, the soldiers must stop being driven,
To save civilians like me and you.
If they stop, then they may be forgiven,
And they will never be forgotten, how they saved a world that then grew and grew.
So, we need to call for peace now...
